

Algorithms for Molecular Docking

Molecular and fragment docking is an important practical area in drug design. There are many computational and physical-chemical issues involved in successful docking. Computational issues involve the efficient calculation of molecular potentials, parallel and cloud computing, database issues and machine learning. This course is a graduate course where these issues will be explored with an emphasis on the practical development of fast and effective applications for this important problem.